If Not Now, Next Fall!

You will be exercising the very best of judgment if you enter our summer school, but in case you can not do so, we hope you will begin now to make your plans to start the first of September.

Too many young people wait until time to enroll is actually upon them before thinking of the steps necessary in making all of the arrangements involved in going to school.

Resident or correspondence instruction.

Write, call, or telephone if we can help you in any way.

1906--1940

The President, Executive and Members of the Scottish Amateur Athletic Association extend a cordial welcome to the thousands who will assemble with them at Polo Park on July 1st. The eventful occasion will mark the 34th Annual Games held under the auspices of the Association. Thanks to the Scottish people of this city, with their inherited love of sport, and to the public in general, the Winnipeg Games have attained to a position of Dominion-wide interest and importance. They have been, from the first, a stimulating and steady influence in the athletic life of the city and province.

In this year, with its unusual trials and anxieties, it was felt that the Games, with all they stand for in the life of Winnipeg, should not be abandoned even for one season. It has been said that Britain's battles were not won through the training of Military Colleges, but on the playgrounds of its public schools.

So we carry on with this day of wholesome sport, offering our patrons such a variety of interesting and fascinating athletic contests as is seldom seen anywhere in one day and on one field. And, should our own events be not quite efficient (though goodness knows they are numerous enough, some 70 in number), it has been arranged that in the afternoon our contests will be again interspersed with the Races of our good friends, the Winnipeg Jockey Club.

On this field of sport you will see humanity at its best—healthy youngsters in lively contests, swift runners, heavyweight stalwarts, jumping experts, quilters, horseshoe pitchers, with pipers and Highland dancers in full pride of race and tartan, all upholding the best traditions of our people and the land from whence many of them came—indeed a fitting feast for Dominion Day!

President

Aye, and it is the yearly foregather-in' of the Clans, where Mac meets Mac, and the glories of past days are recalled.

MacCrimmon, the Prince of Pipers

WHILE others have won fame on the fields of battle in the turbulent years of Scotland's story it has been given to the MacCrimmons to gain immortality in the music of the country. Wherever Gaels gather sooner or later the name and music of MacCrimmon is mentioned, though few may know the quiet history of the Clan.

Of its origin there are many stories, one of which, the most romantic, traces them back to a man who studied at Cremona and settled as a piper in Glenelg, but there is little evidence to back this claim, and it was the association of the great pipers with the MacLeods which earned them undying fame.

For three hundred years they held the office of pipers to the MacLeods and enjoyed the estate of Borerraig as reward for their duties. Here it was that their famous college of piping was instituted, and to it came ambitious young men to gain the hall-mark of their profession.

But they were warriors as well as pipers, those sons of Skye, and on the MacLeod side performed many deeds of daring and valour. Against the Mackenzies Donald Mhor MacCrimmon carried on in the regular Rob Roy fashion, burning their houses and having hair-breadth escapes.

To his son, Patrick, pipers are indebted for some of the finest music ever written for the national instrument. To hear his "Cumhadh na Cloinne" played by an expert is a soul-stirring experience, for into the music he put all the sorrow of his heart, broken as it was by the death in one year of seven of his children.

The famous MacCrimmon tune is, however, "Cha til mi tulidh," the finest lament ever written. Its story is interesting. The Act of 1748 abolished the office of hereditary pipers, and the lands MacCrimmons had held for their office reverted to the MacLeods. Gradually they died out or left their native district and the last of them, Donald Dhu—Black Donald—wrote the tune at Greenock when he went there with the intention of emigrating to Canada.

An interesting story is told of the MacCrimmon pipers during the '45 Rising. As the MacLeods on this occasion were on the Government side MacCrimmons went with them on the march to Aberdeen to attack Lord Lewis Gordon. The expedition was unsuccessful for, at Inverurie, the column of MacLeods, Munros, and MacCrimmons were attacked by the Jacobites and scattered, Donald Ban MacCrimmon being one of the prisoners captured.

What followed gives some indication of the power of the MacCrimmons in the piping world. On the day following the battle there was no sound of pipes in Aberdeen, and Lord Gordon, asking the reason, was told that so long as a MacCrimmon was a prisoner, so long would the Jacobite pipers be silent, and at once Donald Ban was released.

Very shortly afterwards he was killed in an attempt to capture Prince Charlie at Moy Hall of the Mackintoshes. The story of this abortive attempt belongs really to the Mackintosh clan, for their bravery and strategy saved the Prince and in the retreat from Moy Donald Ban met his death.
